Founder's Day Brings Out the Best in Us

The speakers may be different, but the common message on each Founder's Day resonates with pride and togetherness and living out the University's mission.

"I am convinced that the vast majority of instructors at Sacred Heart University think of their work not simply as an occupation, but as a calling," Richard Grigg, Ph.D., professor of religious studies, told the record gathering of 550 at the 38th annual Founder's Day ceremonies March 28 in the Pitt Center. Flik catered the buffet luncheon.

"The material they teach is approached not as just so much 'stuff' to pass on, not as a commodity, but as a means to a student's achievement of his or her potential as a human being," Dr. Grigg said. "Sacred Heart's faculty does, I think, give its best effort in teaching our students, an effort that breathes life into the formulations of the mission statement."

The afternoon's lone 35-year honoree, Carol Schofield, Ph.D., associate professor of biology, was unable to attend because of a death in her family. Marian Calabrese, Ph.D., an associate professor of English who is recovering from back surgery, accepted the award — a special golf club — from President Anthony J. Cerner, Ph.D.

In all, 24 faculty and staff members were saluted for their 35, 25, 20 and 15 years of loyal service.

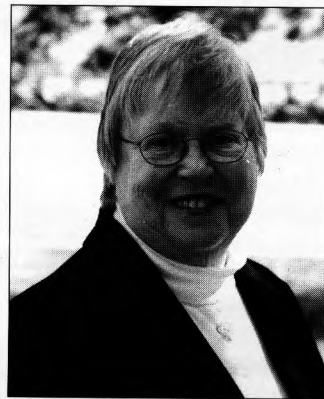

Like Dr. Grigg, the program's other speakers provided reflections rooted in the University's mission. "Through daily interactions on campus, and off-campus contributions to Bridgeport, Fairfield, Trumbull, other cities and states, other countries, we share a piece of ourselves with others," pointed out Darlene Harris, a senior from Derby who is an active member of the University's Habitat for Humanity campus chapter.

"We share life, we give hope, and we provide nourishment for the body, mind and soul of other human beings . . . I hope this University continues to give of itself daily, and that those who receive know that we do so out of kindness, respect and love for one another."

Lisa Boland, special projects analyst in the business office, noted that although faculty and staff balance myriad responsibilities at work and in their personal lives, "we find the time to make the mission of the University part of our daily lives."

"We are successful," said Boland, "because we are able to reach beyond what is comfortable and convenient, and do the extraordinary." ■

Honoring 35 Years of Excellence

Carol Schofield, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of Biology

Often, when scientists seek to determine the nature of a being, they peer through a microscope at a slice of tissue, or more recently, examine its DNA. Fortunately for us at Sacred Heart University, all we need to understand Carol Day Schofield is to watch her in action. We can accompany her to school on a Sunday morning and observe her setting up a lab for a group of students who really need the extra help. We need only to sit beside her in a classroom as she quietly observes a new colleague in order to give support or share her expertise in matters of pedagogy. Or we can raise our voices and clap our hands with her as she celebrates the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show's Best-in-Show victory of her beloved breed, the English Springer Spaniel. We observe this Renaissance woman as she discusses what it means (and what it takes) to be a physician who not only cures but also heals with a group of premed students and cast members after viewing the Pulitzer Prize-winning play "Wit." Or we can join her on the links because for this woman of the always half-filled glass, golf is never "a good walk spoiled." Her teaching is without peer; we've known this for 35 years and it has often been honored and praised by her students. Carol has brought — and continues to bring — honor to Sacred Heart each day. How fortunate we are to call her colleague, faculty advocate, mentor and friend.

— Dr. Bunny Calabrese.

Saluting the 25-Year Recipients

Sidney Gottlieb, Ph.D., Professor of English

Dedicated teacher, acclaimed scholar, prolific author and editor, and above all else a compassionate human being — he is the quintessential man. Besides being an educator who cares deeply about his students and the courses he teaches, besides being an internationally recognized authority on the poet George Herbert and the filmmaker Alfred Hitchcock, besides editing two journals and writing numerous books and articles, there are the other sides of Sid — the accomplished musician, the master athlete, and above all the person ready to listen with an open mind. Certainly his extraordinary service as a teacher-scholar for a quarter of a century provides us with a legacy that is rich indeed. On this special occasion, honoring two-and-a-half decades of intense commitment to students and scholarship, we can only hope that he continues to grace these halls for many years to come.

— Dr. Ralph Corrigan.

Domenick Pinto, M.S.,

Associate Professor of Computer Science

The computer science students think that Domenick is one of the coolest and brightest teachers teaching in the Computer Science Department. They think this even when his difficult exams end in the late hours of the evening or projects take hours or weeks to develop. Computer science students, who are gluttons for punishment, still sign up for his courses in droves. (We think that the pizzas he feeds them help.) The numerous awards presented to him for Excellence in Teaching and Campus Leadership at various national conferences only begin to tell the real story of Mr. Pinto. Domenick has a passion for our Computer Science Department and has done a wonderful job in guiding and implementing the required changes that technology mandates, shaping the curriculum into what it is today.

— Sandra S. Honda-Adams.

Jean Sells, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Mathematics

During her 25 years at Sacred Heart University, Dr. Sells has served not only as a valued faculty member, but also as department chair, accessible and helpful to the members of her department, challenging her faculty to the same high standards she herself always strives to meet. More recently she has turned her interests in one particular direction. Not wanting Sacred Heart University students to muddle through life making choices based on incomplete information, she teaches statistics. With all the changes that have occurred over the years in the Mathematics Department, Dr. Sells has been the staunch supporter of high standards and values. Above all, she values education and its ideals. It would be hard to imagine the Mathematics Department without Jean's smile every morning at 7 a.m.

— Dr. Rose Marie Kinik.

Laurence Weinstein, Ed.D., Professor of Management

Countless students, faculty and administrators have had the good fortune of being touched by a genuine teacher — Lorrie Weinstein. He constantly searches for ways to improve, to learn more. This he does with a peace that comes from knowing that the sole purpose of learning is to be able to give that knowledge to others. In his 25 years of service to the Sacred Heart University community, Lorrie has taught at the undergraduate and graduate levels in Fairfield, Stamford and Luxembourg. His professional accomplishments include founding and editing the New England Journal of Entrepreneurship. His service to the University includes chairing the Management Department, Faculty Senate, Rank and Tenure committee, Strategic Planning committee and various curriculum committees. Several junior faculty members affectionately refer to him as "The Captain" because of his unassuming manner of leadership. He leads by serving others. We celebrate the gifts of Lorrie Weinstein. He has affected eternity with his passion, tireless work ethic and love of life.

— Dr. Matthew Roy.

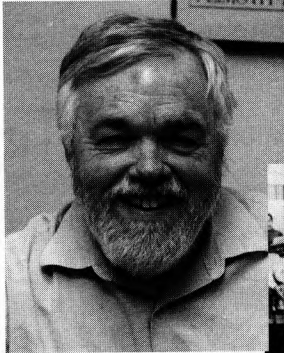

Recognizing the 20-Year Honorees

Loretta Winter

Eunice Stead

Dr. David Curtis

Founder's Day 20-year honorees, from left: Val Chevron, Dr. Virginia Harris, Dr. Pete Fairbaugh and George Lombardi.

Dr. Angela DiPace

Anna DiCenso

Valerie Cologgi

Val Chevron, M.A., Adjunct Professor of English

Val has been a valued member of the department of Language, Literature and Media Studies for the past 20 years, where he has taught in the areas of communications and theater performance. Professor Chevron's students recognize him as a dedicated and committed professor with a creative and dynamic approach to teaching. Val's career extends far beyond the classroom. He is a professional actor of the stage, television and the movies. Locally Val has performed at the American Shakespeare Theater, The Center for the Performing Arts and The Polka Dot Playhouse where he won the Director-of-the-Year Award three times for directing "Fiddler on the Roof," "Death of a Salesman" and "The Dining Room." But most importantly, Val is a friend, an advisor, and a mentor — an inspiration to all: faculty, students and the wider community.

—Richard McKinnon.

Valerie Cologgi, Secretary, Registrar

Valerie is one of the major reasons that hundreds of students leave Sacred Heart University year after year. And no one can stop her. Valerie has been at Sacred Heart for 20 years, for 13 of which she has been the "graduation office." She has tackled, almost single-handedly, the overwhelming task of requesting and receiving applications for graduation and compiling the necessary information for review. She also orders and checks the diplomas and manages the distribution of caps and gowns (and knows what color tassel you should be wearing). If it's May, there is a constant line of students at her desk and pleas from parents for just 60 extra tickets. Through all of this, she brings joy to her co-workers and order to her job. It can be feared that when Val Cologgi retires, students just may be found wandering the hallowed halls of Sacred Heart University asking, "How do I get out of here?"

—Nance Donato.

David Curtis, Ph.D., Professor of English

Dr. Curtis arrived on campus 20 years ago — beret in hand — literature his purpose. As a professor he has urged students to rise above the obvious and mundane — imposing high standards for academic success. As the chair of a large and unwieldy department he has advocated for faculty and staff, in spite of limited resources. As a member of the faculty he has been a voice of integrity and wit — his e-mails sparkle with insight and indignation — his comments bristle with candor and charm. As a member of our species he has been receptive to the vagaries of human life but intolerant of hypocrisy and pretense. As a poet he has found his muse in the quotidian and the operatic, for, as Seamus Heaney stated,

Between my finger and my thumb
The squat pen rests.
I'll dig with it.

A good man — a good digger! —Dr. Rosemary Green.

Anna DiCenso '69, M.A.,

Adjunct Instructor of Mathematics

A graduate of the Class of '69 with a degree in mathematics, Anna can best be described as the "SHU Math Professor on our Derby campus." Semester after semester, Anna works diligently with our part-time adult students, developing their algebraic and problem-solving skills to prepare them for careers in business. As vice principal of Derby High School, she is well aware of the needs of present-day students and most concerned with their achieving success. In addition to her many administrative duties, Anna has still been able to find the time to pursue a master's degree in mathematics.

—Dr. Rose Marie Kinik.

Angela DiPace, Ph.D., Associate Professor of English

When Angela arrived at Sacred Heart University from Washington State University, she immediately began to make a contribution to the English Department that has had considerable breadth and scope: as a director of the Freshman Communication Program, as a faculty chair, as a senior faculty member. Her willingness to take on new assignments, her intelligence, and her dedication to teaching have made her a vital member of the English faculty. And the many gifts and mementos on her desk and in her office bear witness to the respect, affection and gratitude she has inspired in her students and advisees. Her friends can attest that to ride as a passenger in a car with Angela is an adventure in basic Italian oaths; to witness her pleasure in Japanese and pre-Raphaelite art is to be in the presence of a strong aesthetic sensibility; to be invited to her home for a meal is to indulge in the fare of an exceptional cook. All this and a valued colleague, too. We are indeed fortunate.

—Dr. Judith Miller.

Rawlin "Pete" Fairbaugh, Ed.D.,

Associate Professor of Management

Mature, experienced and thoughtful, Rawlin A. "Pete" Fairbaugh brings to his teaching the benefits of his long and successful career in business. His success is reflected in the outstanding evaluations he consistently receives from his students. Pete has been an exceptional contributor to the University. It was Pete who had the vision for an MBA program in Luxembourg, and it was his energy and creativity that led to the establishment of the program in 1991. Pete also served the University as director of the MBA program and is a regular teacher of the capstone courses in both the undergraduate and MBA programs. A knowledgeable, experienced professional, he has also represented Sacred Heart University and the U.S. by teaching for several years at the College for Modern Business Studies at Tatabanya, Hungary. Sacred Heart University can take pride that Pete continues to be a member of our team.

—Dr. Edward Gore.

Virginia Harris, Ed.D., Director of Grants

Professionalism and competence provide the foundation for the quiet dignity that Virginia Harris brings to all that she does. Her contributions to the University have been many — from her earliest days as adjunct faculty member in the Biology Department; editor of the first New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) Accreditation report to result in a 10-year period of accreditation; editor of the undergraduate catalog, which still carries her mark; and secretary of two presidential searches to her current position as director of Foundations and Grants. Her "steady-as-she-goes" approach has successfully guided her through many scholarship-related challenges. The happy result has been scholarship funds that have helped hundreds of Sacred Heart University students with their education, outreach programs for which the University has become known, and improved facilities that benefit faculty and students alike. Virginia is an everyday hero who has graced this University by her commitment to its ideals.

—Manoushag Samaan.

George J. Lombardi '73, General Manager, WSHU

George Lombardi joined the station staff as a part-time engineer looking for an interim job. Little did he foresee that he would become its longest continuous employee, the vision and glue that holds the station together, and, as his staff sees it, also its heart and soul. Through George's leadership and tireless commitment, what started out as a local college station with 700 weekly listeners has become an impressive NPR member station with over 188,000 weekly listeners and 18,500 active supporters. Passionate, dedicated, hard-working, available, George's open door policy for his staff, as well as for listeners and supporters, has earned him great respect and admiration. All of us at Sacred Heart University, and especially WSHU, are proud to congratulate George on his many achievements — and anticipate many more to come.

—Gillian Anderson.

Eunice Stead, Membership Administrator, WSHU

Her career at Sacred Heart University began 20 years ago as the switchboard operator. In those days, all University calls had to go through the switchboard. No one got a call without Eunice knowing about it. In 1989 she moved to the WSHU offices to facilitate the billing of all departments for their phone usage. Two years later, Eunice joined the WSHU public radio staff as a data entry clerk, finally relinquishing her switchboard duties. Today Eunice continues to work in the Membership Department as membership administrator, adding weekends and early-morning stints during WSHU membership drives. Reliable and hard working, Eunice is a valuable asset to WSHU Public Radio and the University. But best of all, she is a great friend.

—Lynn Southard.

Loretta Winter '92 MAT, Assistant to Department Chairs of History, Philosophy, Political Science and Religious Studies

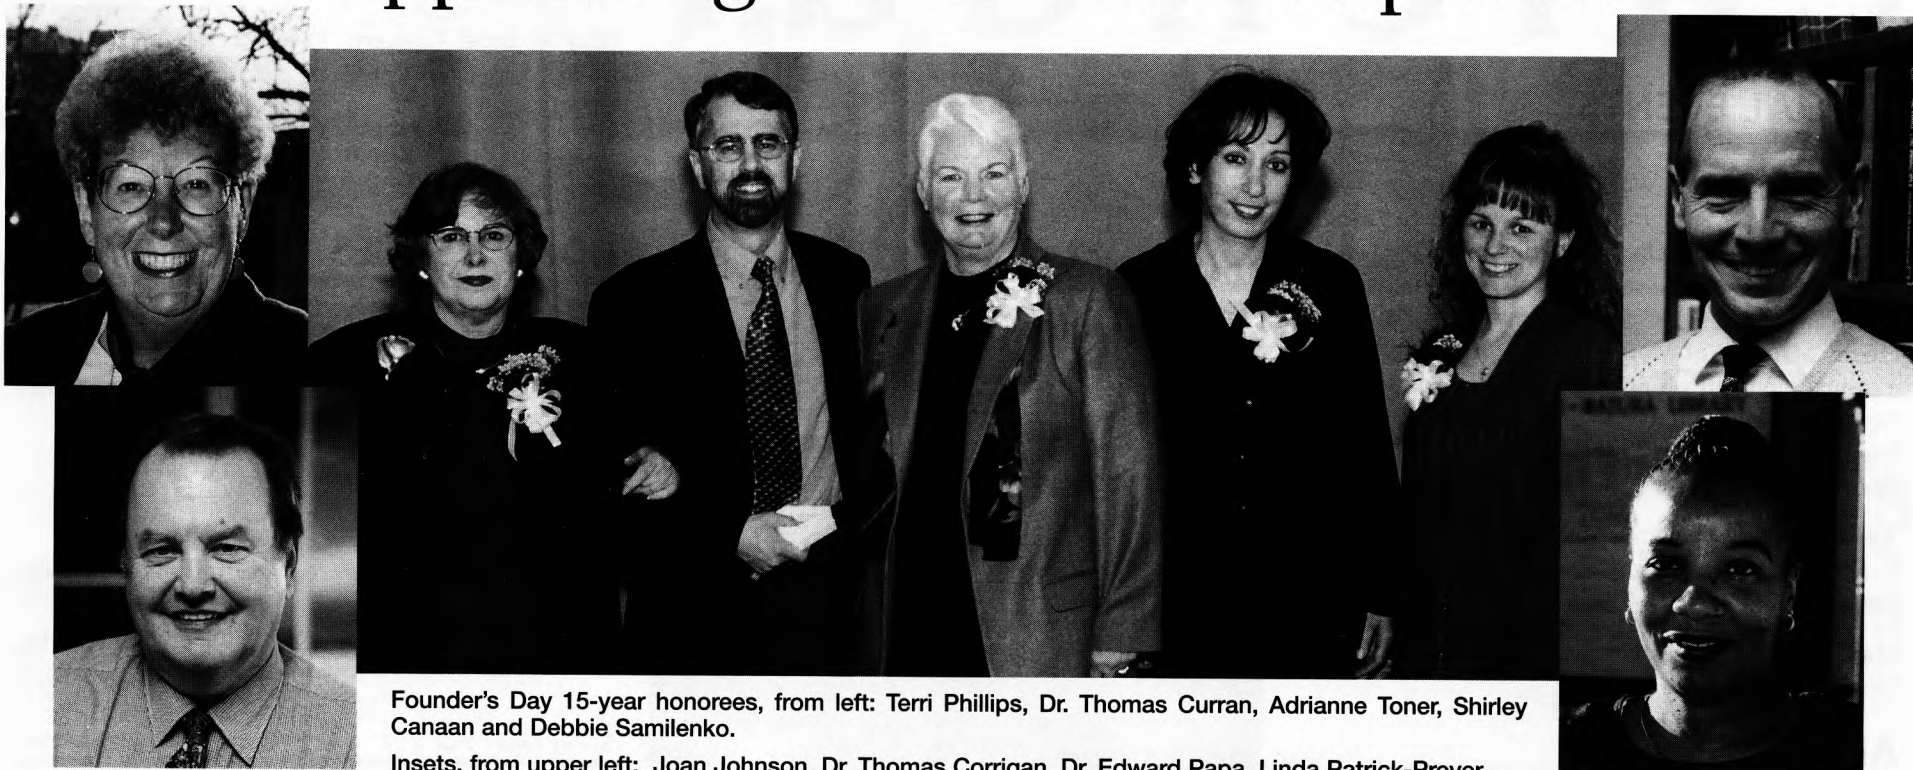

"Efficient," "Dependable," "Dedicated" and "Caring." Such are the words often used to describe Loretta. For 20 years, Loretta has been one of the true pillars of staff support at Sacred Heart University. Whether it is meeting the immediate needs of students, the demands of faculty members, or the requests of university administrators, Loretta Winter, in pleasant fashion, has routinely responded with poise, precision and concern. For the past two years, Loretta has worked as the administrative assistant for the departments of History/Political Science and Philosophy/Religious Studies. For her special dedication to them, for her guidance and advice, the faculty of both academic departments enthusiastically take this opportunity to congratulate and thank Loretta for 20 years of outstanding service to the University.

Applauding the 15-Year Recipients

Founder's Day 15-year honorees, from left: Terri Phillips, Dr. Thomas Curran, Adrienne Toner, Shirley Canaan and Debbie Samilenko.

Insets, from upper left: Joan Johnson, Dr. Thomas Corrigan, Dr. Edward Papa, Linda Patrick-Preyer.

Shirley Canaan '85, '94 MBA,
Director, Administrative Computing

Shirley began her association with Sacred Heart University as a student in the Computer Science Department. She has since then become one of the true "pioneers" of the Information Technology Department. She has been an integral part of the explosive growth and tremendous technological advances that the University has experienced over the past decade, from her role as manager of administrative IT to being a key player in the development of the highly successful Student Mobile Computing Program. A highly dedicated professional, she still manages to find time to keep fit in the William H. Pitt Center. Shirley is a highly respected individual not only in IT, but also campus wide.

— Lori-Jo McEwan and Linda Murphy.

Thomas D. Corrigan, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Finance

Tom has made a truly outstanding contribution to Sacred Heart University programs in economics and finance and to the University community. During the past 15 years, he has served as the MBA program director, chairperson of the Department of Economics and Finance and director of research of the College of Business. Both faculty colleagues and students immensely respect his teaching and research. A proper balance between theory and empirical evidence, which makes his courses very attractive to students, characterizes his unique teaching style. In addition to being an excellent teacher, Dr. Corrigan has a proven record of advanced scholarship. His departmental colleagues very much appreciate his leadership and collaborative, collegial attitude as well as his continuous willingness to offer a helping hand.

— Dr. Lucjan Orłowski.

Thomas Curran, Ph.D., Associate Professor of History

Fortunate is the university that numbers among its faculty an "Indispensable" — in short, Tom, someone like you. Arriving 15 years ago on a campus innocent of Asian history, you fashioned and introduced an attractive and successful Asian history sequence. You broadened our students' horizons, not only bringing China to them, but also taking some of them to China. As a teacher, your high standards, instructional skills and generous individual attention have inspired students and encouraged them to attain their full potential. As a colleague, you have earned the respect both of your fellow historians and the faculty at large. And withal, you have also continued to pursue your own scholarly interests. Hence, it is natural to think of you as an "Indispensable," a treasure to this institution. As we recognize your first decade and a half, we wish you many more productive and satisfying years at Sacred Heart University.

— Dr. Paul Siff.

Joan Johnson, M.A., Adjunct Associate Professor of English

Joan is an enthusiastic and vital presence both in the Department of Language, Literature and Media Studies and the Academic Incentive Program. Readily available for her students and her advisees, Joan teaches English and her specialty, Communication. Upper division students remember Joan's keen interest and positive attitude and often return to seek her advice. She is also the unofficial author of many lyrical tributes to faculty when they attain another degree or retire from active teaching. She has penned words to many well-known melodies so faculty could celebrate the achievements of their colleagues in song. Joan is a genuine example of the love of learning and the joy of creativity.

— Dr. Sylvia Watts.

Edward Papa, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Philosophy

In addition to a firm commitment to excellence in the classroom, Ed Papa has always had an interest in meeting with students outside of the classroom. Over the course of several years Ed took an active part in the semester-long Institute for Medieval Studies program that linked several elective courses with co-curricular activities. Ed was also an energetic supporter of several summer study abroad trips to Amsterdam where many of the museums and landscapes still bear witness to the Golden Age. But it wasn't all stuffy museums for Ed. He was involved constantly in sharing with students through sports, eating and cafes, shopping in markets, and visiting historical sites. Every experience he was involved in became an opportunity to reflect on some aspect of what they were learning in the classroom, and this became the basis for a very rich experience for students.

— Dr. John B. Roney.

Linda Patrick-Preyer, Cataloging Supervisor

During the last 10 of her 15 years at Sacred Heart University, Linda has been a composed, purposeful and tactful member of the staff of the Ryan-Matura Library, helping the Acquisitions Department greatly by her efficient, thorough and reliable work; playing a central role in the library's conversion from Dewey Decimal to the Library of Congress Classification System. And in her current position as cataloging supervisor, keeping her department moving ahead, with minimal backlog. Her smile, along with her laughter and her sense of humor, carry along the entire library staff, bit, byte and soul, in this rapidly changing environment of today's technical library.

— Mary Ellen Bowen, Susan Broadstone, Melanie Lauer Ferko, Lisa Kelley and Kim Macomber.

Terri Phillips, Executive Secretary

Terri came to Sacred Heart University in September 1986 as a secretary in the Education Department, soon to be followed by service in the Office of Public Affairs and Human Resources. Luckily for the University, she joined the Institutional Advancement staff in 1989, where she has become the best source for donor giving, at times proving to be more reliable than the Benefactor software. No matter what role Terri takes on in the University, she does it with accuracy and professionalism. Her creative letters even get Dr. Cerner's approval. Terri considers Sacred Heart University to be part of her family, and we certainly feel that way about her.

— Jody Weldon.

Debbie Samilenko '89,
Manager, Administrative Computing

Debbie got her start as a student at Sacred Heart University, with a double major in computer science and mathematics. Shortly after the original IT department formed, Debbie joined the team and quickly moved up the ranks from programmer analyst to systems integration analyst to her current position as manager of administrative computing and an adjunct instructor of computer science. Whether you are seeking a solution to a problem with Colleague or are in search of access to Budget Inquiry or just looking for a sugar rush in the middle of the afternoon, Debbie is there with a friendly smile to help.

— Lori-Jo McEwan and Linda Murphy.

Adrienne Toner, Purchasing Manager

Who do you call when you needed something yesterday? You have exams tomorrow and you need blue books. You need chairs, desks, business cards, letterhead, office supplies — Adrienne Toner does it all. A true team player, Adrienne knows when a rush order is really a rush and is willing to assist in any way she can. She simply knows how to get things done. Adrienne is a caring person, both professionally and personally. A devoted wife, mother of three and grandmother of six, Adrienne Toner is a very special co-worker and friend, a true asset to the University.

— Lisa Boland.
