

Primary Source Reflection #1

Throughout the last two years of my life dealing with the COVID-19 has not been an easy task. The challenges and issues we faced as a country dealing with COVID-19 was one of the most challenging times of my life. I still remember the last day of high school in my junior year, it was March 13th, of 2020. It was on Friday the 13th when we got the email after school that we're gonna go online to remote learning. Dealing with online learning was hard for me because I have never been used to that challenge before.

The talk about COVID- 19 is gonna be something that is talked about for hundreds of years past our past time. Explaining the pandemic to our children is gonna be something that we can talk down to future generations. The conversations about the challenges we faced on a day to day basis will be talked about for years to come. The talks about having to wear a mask in classes, to wearing them in day to day life just for the safety of your own being. Having to walk around with a mask, hand sanitizer, and gloves everywhere for a year was definitely something nobody was used to. Saying to future generations how the world was shut down in every atmosphere is something hard to even talk about and comprehend.

The topic for COVID-19 is something that will be hard for people to talk about because hundreds of thousands of lives were lost from this horrible pandemic. Many people have lost family members and close relatives because of this pandemic. The pandemic of COVID-19 is gonna be something that we look back on as a time of hardships and challenges that we faced together. The people came together to help stop this pandemic once and for all.
