NBCUniversal Recruitment Day

On April 2, Sacred Heart and Career Development hosted NBCUniversal, who conducted a lecture and internship recruitment day on campus. Nicole McArdle, Campus Recruiter and a member of the NBC Olympics team, led the lecture. McArdle covered information regarding the 2020 Tokyo Olympics and the coverage that NBC offers.

"NBCUniversal owns the U.S. media rights on all platforms to all Olympic Games through 2032," said McArdle.

NBC Sports is currently offering internship opportunities for the 2020 Tokyo Olympics. Students enrolled in an undergrad or grad program are eligible to apply.

According to the job posting on NBCUniversal’s website, “Games of the XXXII Olympiad will take place in Summer 2020 in Tokyo, Japan.” A select number of students will have the opportunity to intern either at the NBC Sports Group facility in Stamford, CT, or in Tokyo, Japan.

Students in attendance also felt that this was a great networking opportunity, and a chance for them to get some insight into what NBCUniversal and NBC Sports Group are all about.

"It is important to learn about the inner workings of a large company before you apply because it is truly a different environment," said senior Kevin Plant.

Joseph Alicastro, former NBC Producer and current professor and Director of the Masters in Broadcast Journalism & Media Production Program, knows how strong the relationship between Sacred Heart and NBCUniversal is.

"The School of Communication, Media, and the Arts at SHU has a very strong relationship with NBCUniversal," said Alicastro. "The opportunity for our students to apply for internships with NBC Sports will help them now and in the future as they enter the job market no matter where they begin their careers.

McArdle told those in attendance what NBCUniversal and NBC Sports looks for in applicants, and what might help someone land an internship with the company.

"Campus involvement is definitely the most important on any students resume. Whether it is playing a sport, being in a club, Greek life, what have you. Campus involvement is what we look for," said McArdle. "Do your research, showcase your value, have thoughtful questions, and most importantly, be yourself."
Every member of Greek Life belongs to their respective chapters and finds their home with their brothers or sisters,” said Panhellenic president and Alpha Delta Pi member Nicole Patch. “We all create our larger community of Panhellenic and the Interfraternity Council and Greek Week is a time for us all to come together and represent our individuality while supporting one another and partaking in some light-hearted competition.”

On April 1, Greek life hosted the beginning event of their annual week-long competition between all Greek organizations. They hosted their kick-off event in the University Commons and continued to have events the entirety of the week to promote unity between Greek organizations and community service.

“Greek Week is planned mainly by our IFC and Panhellenic Vice Presidents of Programming. This year, the students in those roles are Jack Boese from Kappa Sigma and Hannah Jones from Kappa Delta,” said the director of Greek life, Nick Frias. “They have been working very hard since the beginning of the spring semester to come up with the week-long schedule of events and make sure safety is the top priority.”

This week included activities such as Family Feud, an Escape Room, Greek Sing, a banner contest, a community service day, and Greek Olympics. Greek Sing is a lip-singing and dancing contest where each organization gets a theme and needs to prepare a performance in hopes to win points towards Greek Week. This year’s Greek Sing was held on Thursday and the theme was board games. Each organization was assigned a game and had to create a routine about it.

The contest was judged by Emily Grobmeier and Sarah Haimann, who both work in residential life along with Anne Wendel, who works in Volunteer Programs.

Phi Sigma Sigma, which had the theme of Clue, won first place. Second place was given to Beta Theta Pi, which had the theme Candyland, and third place was given to Delta Zeta with the theme Sorry.

“All of our hard work paid off,” said sophomore Beta Theta Pi member Matt Andriunas. “I think we really deserved it, we put in a lot of time and effort, late nights and long hours, so we are really excited.”

The community service day was on Friday and included a lot of student participation in hopes of using Greek life as a platform to help others.

“The service day is new for us, and we are excited to help bring the Greek Community together in support of the community engagement standards we all uphold in our individual fraternities and sororities,” said Interfraternity Council (IFC) president and Beta Theta Pi member Daniel Marino.

The final event of Greek Week was the annual Greek Olympics, which took place on April 7 and consisted of relay races, tug of war, and flag football. The winners were fraternity Omega Phi Kappa and sorority Kappa Alpha Theta, which made for another successful Greek week.

“Although we all wear different letters and promote different core values, Sacred Heart’s fraternities and sororities are all founded on similar aspirations and expectations,” said Marino. “Greek Week provides an excellent opportunity to show our university what we stand for and what it truly means to be a part of Greek Life.”

It was announced Monday morning that the overall winners of Greek Week were Phi Sigma Sigma. In second place is Delta Zeta, and coming in third place, Kappa Alpha Theta.

Relay for Life hosted their 11th annual fundraiser at Sacred Heart’s William H. Pitt Center on Friday to build awareness and raise money for cancer.

This year’s event was Hawaiian themed, the event was called “Re Lei for Life.” Participants dressed in leis and tropical t-shirts as they walked around the track to show their support.

“Relay for Life fundraiser is a part of the American Cancer Society. The goal is to raise as much money as possible to lessen the burden on the survivors, caregivers, and those currently fighting cancer, as well as support research efforts working towards finding a cure for cancer,” said Relay for Life President Erica Heinz.

Relay for Life is a community-organized fundraising event, in which members of the community come together under the organization. Sacred Heart has its own Relay for Life club which students can join to help orchestrate the events and raise money.

“One week we went to one meeting, we immediately fell in love with the work that this organization does and the connection that it builds between the SHU community and the survivors in surrounding towns,” said Hinz. “This club has been on campus for 11 years, and the reason why we gain so much participation within the community is because cancer is such a prevalent disease. Everyone knows someone who has been affected by it.”

Sacred Heart created a fundraising page that encouraged people to form teams 'in order to walk together. Many of SHU’s Greek Life organizations created teams, as well as some clubs. To name a few: SHU Club Football, Kappa Alpha Theta, Iota Phi Theta, Theta Phi Alpha, Chi Omega, Kappa Delta, Delta Zeta, SET, Kappa Sigma, and Love Your Melon.

“I am not a member of Relay for Life, but try to attend the yearly event as cancer education and awareness is something important to me. The event is upbeat yet sentimental, making fundraising something I want to be a part of,” said junior Sean Burke.

“I came to this event with a few of my buddies having never heard of it, but I am enjoying myself,” said freshman Andrew Zebarth. “The event raises money for a good cause but does not feel like just any fundraiser.”

The event consisted of both Sacred Heart students and members of the community. As of press time, it has raised $8,188.13.

The event was advertised through the efforts of the club’s marketing and advertising committee. “This committee is made up of mostly freshmen who brought new and fun ideas about ways to appeal to those on campus as well as creating the ads that we used to advertise the event. We have advertised through email, posters, fliers, and social media,” said Hinz.

“Cancer is something present in my family, so attending events to support members of the community is nice. Coming together with strangers for a meaningful cause is something I will always make time for,” said sophomore Kara Langdon.

Relay for Life was Hawaiian themed as the organization worked towards raising money for cancer research.
Watching films has always been something special to me. You learn to appreciate different things as life moves on and it goes to show that there is a real art in the moving image. We see a piece of ourselves in films. Many films comment on how we live and who we are and you, can learn and experience a bit from the screen, depending on what you're looking for of course.

Some films are so good, or make enough money, that they make way for other movies to be made, continuing the story in one way or another. Sequels, prequels and spin-offs within cinematic universes can be made and can all be interesting. However, those films almost never top the original. The original will always be the staple for what got these franchises of the later acts just don't reach the same place is because of that initial film. That first adventure.

Now I do think one can debate certain sequels being better than the first movie. I'd say "Empire Strikes Back," "The Dark Knight," "Spiderman 2," and a few others can make valid arguments.

The first time you do or experience something always stays with you and realizing that does kind of point this argument in my favor, but that's up to the viewer to decide. Why do you like the films you do? How do they make you feel? For me, I'll never forget the feeling of seeing a film for the first time. Good or bad, first impressions are the ones that stay with you.

For myself, it's always more interesting to see what the sequels end up being than the originals. One of my favorite franchises has been "The Fast and Furious" because of all the entertaining surprises that the original couldn't have been able to demonstrate.

If you want a reason to support sequels over its original movies, you only have to look at the box office. Of the top 10 highest-grossing films of all time, six of them are actual sequels, which only proves, at least in my opinion, that many people are really interested in these kinds of movies, and personally, it's something that I'm happy to see.

Despite the common opinion that perhaps sequels are inferior to originals, some sequels have a story worth telling. It may be a negative thing to see creators get lazy because of the familiarity that we receive with the characters, but personally, there are certain exceptions to the narratives that sequels got a good example would be if you look at the popularity of The Aventures or the films from the Marvel Cinematic Universe. This is because people were generally interested and excited because of the hype that comes surrounding these movies. So with that, I think there is always a sort of love that should be given to sequels, just like original movies.
Performers showed up.

Negative feedback about Khalid's Sacred Heart debut.

"Khalid was a really good performer for SHU," said freshman Simona Bruno. "He was very interactive with the crowd and was amazing live and in-person.

"I didn't know any of Khalid's songs prior to coming to the spring concert," said junior Dom Ferranola. "I thought he was very good overall." Many students were pleased with Khalid's performance and had nothing but positive things to say about the event.

"I really enjoyed Khalid's concert," said junior Dom Ferranola. "I thought he was very interactive with the crowd and was amazing live and in-person.

"Khalid was a really good performer for SHU," said freshman Simona Bruno. "He brought happy and positive vibes to the whole crowd, and was so into his performance. It was so cool to see him in-person." For some students, however, the Pitt Center wasn't the ideal place to hold the spring concert.

"Being a sophomore, I have never had the experience of a spring concert before," said Vreeland. "I'm so happy that Khalid showed up, and even better, showed Sacred Heart a great time. It was such a fun way to spend my Friday night."
Forgive But Don't Forget

The biggest advice that I could give to someone is to forgive but not forget. There is nothing that I hate more than holding grudges, particularly pointless ones. I especially hate when grudges are held simply because someone is too scared to face what happened and would rather run away than face their problems head on. However, what I can say is that although living one's life around grudges is an extremely unhealthy way to live, it is also unhealthy to forget altogether the things that have happened. Everything that has happened in the past is not something that should be buried and forgotten, but something that should be used to make better, more educated decisions in the future. The more we experience, the wiser we become and the more we can use this experience towards our future decisions. Running away from the bad will only cause the same mistakes to be made over and over again. I have experienced so many people during my time in college alone who are holding onto things that do not even affect them anymore just because they do not want to let go of a grudge and they do not want to be the one to cave. For me, the key to happiness when you're upset is to take space from someone or something while the wound is fresh and take time to recover. Then, slowly working towards being okay to be around the person or situation again. I am not saying to get to the point where things are as though nothing ever happened, but to me, to be able to see something or hear about something and to have it not affect you is to officially have gotten over something. I have had my fair share of fights and mishaps within friendships. There are people who I have either fixed things completely with or at least have reached a good place with, and there are the people who refuse to work on things with me. With those who refuse to work with me, I am either still working on being okay with or I have reached a place where I can hear about them or see them without being negatively affected or thinking twice. I am not holding a grudge, but I have not forgotten. I have gotten to a good place with some situations using this method, and I will get there with others too.

Life with Migraines

SARA TERPAK
ASSISTANT FEATURES EDITOR

For almost seven years now, I've been dealing with chronic migraines. I would praise the day that my head would not hurt. From tension and stress headaches to migraines, they took over my life. The duration of the headaches would last a few hours, days or weeks. Medication after medication, hospital trips, MRI scans, different doctors, trying acupuncture, and biofeedback—Nothing was working. My life felt like it was falling apart. It all started at the end of middle school going into high school. It was difficult for me to get up and go to school while I was in pain. Almost every day I had a headache that would turn into a migraine. It was not easy being in school for eight hours in a loud environment with fluorescent lights. I could barely lift my head because I was in excruciating pain. I felt trapped and had nowhere to go. In my first year of college, my migraines didn't seem so bad. I thought maybe, just maybe, I grew out of them. I wouldn't get them as frequently. Boom. Sophomore year hit and it seemed they came back even worse. It was one day after a horrible migraine that I decided I can't live my life like this anymore. I needed relief, and I needed it fast. There would be days I would have to lay in bed with the lights off to get some sense of relief. I would go through ice packs like there was no tomorrow. The coldness would numb the pain just for a little. On the nights that my friends would go and hang out, I had to stay in and the fear of missing out would kick in. Even some days in class, the pain wouldn't stop but I had to push through it, because I couldn't afford to miss a class. I felt hopeless, it hurt to move and the pain was unbearable. I couldn't focus in school and my grades were suffering. I felt like I was missing out on time in college, especially with friends.

About a few months ago, my life started to change. My roommate and I decided to purchase an oil diffuser. I did some research and it not only helped with migraines, but stress and sleep as well. Peppermint and lavender oils are my essential oils. If I put it on the diffuser or place it on my temples for some relief. But I knew I had to do more than just oils to get relief. I was still struggling with my migraines until recently trying a new medication specifically for migraines. Finally, after seven years, I'm really starting to notice a small difference. Even though it is a small difference, I am finding some relief. And hopefully, one day I would feel little to no pain at all.

Greeked Life

BY KATHRYN ANDES
Staff Reporter

Alumni of Sacred Heart University Anthony Sallemi, Frank Scozzari, and Richard Keegan have founded a social network for members of Greek life across the country, called Greeked Life.

“For all of us, Greek life was a huge factor of our college experiences, and we realized that a lot of things could be done to help people in Greek life, whether they be the individuals in the chapter or in the surrounding community. We decided to organize a platform to unite Greek life,” said Richard Keegan.

Scozzari, Keegan, and Sallemi saw an opportunity to connect Greek life organizations with each other and members of the community.

“We were all members of Pi Kappa Phi at Sacred Heart and whenever we’ve personally reached out to another Pi Kappa Phi member they’ve immediately helped us by signing up and rating our app because they want to help their brother or sister that lives across the country,” said Keegan.

Regarding the bad reputation that Greek life can sometimes acquire, Anthony Sallemi said, “It’s a privilege to be in Greek life and no one should abuse it by partying all the time – they should focus on philanthropic work.”

“Our hope and vision is to grow the Greek community through our platform and to connect to the local community and alumni, and to not focus on the partying and negative connotations,” said Frank Scozzari.

Anthony Sallemi came up with the idea and went into business with Keegan and Scozzari, and the three brought the company to life.

“When I was an undergrad I thought of the idea, but I looked at the price to see how much it would cost to get going and it was too high to fathom. But once I was an alumnus and working, I had the idea again and realized this still hasn’t been invented. That is when I called Richard Keegan, the former president, and soon after that we brought Frank Scozzari on board,” said Sallemi.

Sallemi, Scozzari, and Keegan want to focus on the good that Greek life can bring into a community, and help chapters connect with each other and better serve those in need.

“We have a portion of the website and app dedicated to community service projects that anybody can post,” said Sallemi. “Say a church in the area near Sacred Heart needed something built – they could simply find our website and post that they need something, and it goes directly to the organizations at Sacred Heart, and any or all of the organizations can help to get that done.”

Sallemi, Keegan, and Scozzari predict that as more and more organizations join on the app, there will be countless amounts of community service opportunities available for members of Greek life.

Fur Therapy

BY PROF. JANE PALEY
Communication Studies Professor

Students’ squeals of joy emanate from the UC when the therapy dogs arrive. People look gloomy and sad – then the dogs bring a smile to their face. For six years, I was the lesser half of a canine therapy team. It was one of the most rewarding experiences of my life.

Our rescued Labrador Retriever traveled from his native Louisiana not long after Hurricane Katrina. We named him Hooper. He was confused by the leash; we suspected he had been a yard dog who got loose and somehow survived the pelting rains and wind.

He ended up in a shelter until we adopted him.

He didn’t bark. He flinched at loud noises and was terrified by thunder and lightning, which sent him scrambling into the back of a closet. But he instinctively sat and looked lovingly into the eyes of every child he met on the street or in the park.

“He should be a therapy dog,” a neighbor suggested.

Hooper and I went to a local obedience class and worked our way through a therapy training program. He was always the demo dog; he learned the skills more quickly and effortlessly than I did. Our training included a 10-week series of visits to a school for challenged children. He loved them all and sat patiently when they struggled to coordinate their petting strokes or tried (and sometimes failed) to control their impulses to pull his ears or hit him.

We protected each other in and out of school and became a team. He comforted mourners in Sandy Hook. We visited libraries, hospitals, and schools where he inspired many, but none more than me. I would never have volunteered in this capacity had he not provided the incentive. He opened my heart and filled it with deeper love.

When the work became too taxing for him, he retired to the living room sofa and enjoyed civilian life. He died and our family cried for a very long time.

We finally rescued another dog. We named him Knuckles. He has no aptitude for therapy work.

He’s just a sweet, happy-go-lucky little guy who makes us smile. He is another of the infinite kinds of love God offers us.

Visiting the therapy teams at SHU brought back many happy memories and a few sad ones. A dog’s ability to heal with love will always be a marvel to me. I was lucky to learn this first hand from Hooper.

Alumni Spotlight: Ross Riskin

BY PAXTON MCLANE
Staff Reporter

Have you ever had trouble planning to pay for college? Have you ever had trouble with financial aid or a financial adviser who doesn’t know all the facts?

Ross Riskin, a graduate student in the Doctor of Business Administration (DBA) in Finance program is bridging the gap between financial advisors and families looking to send their children to college with his new financial planning book.

“The Adviser’s Guide to Educational Planning” is a 114-page book that covers topics such as education funding, financial aid planning, and education tax deduction/credit planning. It includes chapters covering specific strategies for high-income and high-net-worth individuals, business owners, divorced/divorcing couples and grandparents.

“Back in 2017, I founded the American Institute of Certified College Financial Consultants (AICCFC), which I no longer have ownership of. Through this, I was able to form relationships with some great individuals at the AICPA a few years prior and the opportunity presented itself to author a planning guide for CPAs and financial advisors focused on education planning,” said Riskin.

However, before that opportunity, Riskin had seen the perils of college financial planning first hand.

“Since 2012, I have been working with families and financial advisors, who in general have very limited knowledge about college planning outside of investing in 529 college savings plans and guidance counselors. Generally, guidance counselors have very limited knowledge of finances when it comes to college. This book serves to educate advisors so that gap can eventually be closed,” said Riskin.

While there are hundreds of books written about financial planning each year, Riskin sets his apart by shifting the focus of a traditional financial planning book.

“There are many books written about college planning, but most focus on the academic rather than the financial planning aspects of paying for college: this touches on both and is written from the perspective of a practitioner and academic,” said Riskin. “It is also written as a practical planning guide that provides client cases and illustrative examples so advisors can put what they learn into action immediately upon reading it.”

Riskin is currently an Assistant Professor of Taxation and the CFP Program Director at the American College of Financial Services. He is also the Vice President of Riskin & Riskin, PC, a public accounting firm located in Orange, Conn., and the Managing Member of Plainview Innovation Ventures, LLC, a fintech startup. He is an avid musician too, playing guitar, bass, piano, drums, and vocals.

“The Adviser’s Guide to Financial Planning” is currently only available to CPAs with the Personal Financial Specialist (PFS) designation or those who are members of the AICPA’s Personal Financial Planning Section. It is offered complimentary to them. It is not geared toward advisors, not consumers.

Riskin hopes that by the time he graduates from the DBA program in 2020 the book will be available in a more widespread advisor market.
Review: Billie Eilish’s First Full-length LP

BY STEPHANIE PETTWAY
Co-A&E Editor

Billie Eilish, the 17-year-old pop singer who is showing that pop music can have a dark side. Think of a darker Lana Del Rey, or Lorde, or even Kanye West during his “Yeezus” era, and you get Eilish. Having a soft, and wispy voice that carries most of her songs with a heavy bass, a simple piano, or even a ukulele or guitar, Eilish is not the average young singer.

With her Aug. 2017 EP, “Don’t Smile at Me,” Billie made a splash with her song “bellyache,” in which she entertains a fictional scenario about having a vendetta against her own friends. With this rather twisted song, she sets the tone for the type of music she wants to share with her audience, and she continues it in her first full-length album, called "WHEN WE ALL FALL ASLEEP, WHERE DO WE GO?"

With a modern yet familiar sound, Eilish reminds fans why they liked her in the first place, while also catching the attention of people like myself, who haven’t heard her music before. The album experiments with many different sounds of electropop, indie, and alternative.

I am going to start with my favorite song, "my strange addiction." It features samples from NBC’s "The Office" and a groovy beat that can’t be ignored. I am not usually someone that likes repetitive songs, but this is one of the few that is catchy and gives me a bit more substance.

Sampling other artists’ songs has been a longstanding practice, but who has ever heard of someone sampling a popular TV show? Having that sample playing over an electronic beat adds an extra bit of individuality that shows just how much talent she has at just 17 years old.

Another stand-out is the longest song, "I love you," wherein Eilish sings over a guitar and you literally fall in love. It’s a sincere ballad of a rocky relationship. It brings you through the emotions of a relationship that you should have not to experience: loving someone when you know you shouldn’t. It’s a distinctive love song, although featuring a rather standard melody, but it’s nice to know that Eilish is not entirely wrapped up in electropop and Auto-Tune; she has a voice that can convey her honesty too.

Singles "bury a friend" and "when the party’s over" are unique songs, and each give a good taste of the album as a whole. "Bury a friend" is the song that gives me that “Yeezus,” "Black Skinhead" vibe; it’s a young female perspective with the same amount of angst. It gives off a spooky tone with a monotonous bass and makes you think about the concept of what happens to us when we fall asleep. Kanye makes us think about a similarly complex theme in his song.

In the music video for "you should see me in a crown," you get to see Eilish explore arachnophobia. In the video she wears a crown as a spider crawls on her leg, arm, face, and even out of her mouth.

"When the party’s over" is about just that - what happens after the end of a party. It’s about leaving someone you love, letting them go, saying your final goodbye. This song completely sums up the adolescent and young adult mood that we currently feel.

This album made me a fan of Eilish, and makes me excited to listen to her prior and future projects. Though age should not be a factor when it comes to talent, I am very impressed with just how much talent Eilish has at just 17 years old. She captures all the moodiness and angst that we all feel, no matter what age we are. It just goes to show that she is only just getting started. I expect she will have much in store for us as her career progresses.

The Sacred Heart University dance team is back in Daytona Beach, Fla., for this year’s National Collegiate Cheer and Dance Competition. The Pioneers enjoyed a fourth-place finish in the hip-hop category and a seventh-place finish overall in Team Performance during last year’s competition.

The team was optimistic heading into the weekend.

"The team is extremely fired up right now," said senior Chelesy Curlin. "We have worked so hard this year and are eager to show the judges and the audience."
“Sex in the City” Author Takes on #MeToo

BY NICOLA PAERG
Staff Reporter

“Sex in the City” author Candace Bushnell is collaborating with young adult writer Katie Cotugno for her next project. The pair will be creating a novel that correlates with the #MeToo movement to draw attention towards it.

“I have not read any of her books,” said freshman Dorrat Stangel. “I feel like the book topic is a good idea because it is something that our generation stands behind and it can help continue the sparked conversation.”

The #MeToo movement has ignited a national conversation acknowledging the survivors and victims of sexual assault and domestic violence according to the Me Too Movement website.

“Sexual violence, in my eyes, is something that is becoming a more prevalent issue in our society today and definitely gets overlooked,” said junior Samantha Zebitsch. “The fact that she is taking the risk to write about it is really courageous and inspiring because many books don’t talk about things of this nature.”

Cotugno is known for her books “How to Love” and “99 Days.” She considers herself to write “complicated, feminist love stories.”

“I feel that the #MeToo movement is a necessity that will ultimately contribute to raising awareness to an issue that shouldn’t be an issue anymore,” said Stangel. “It’s an issue that is not right and people keep ignoring it, but it continues to affect a majority of the people in the world.”

The novel “Rules for Being a Girl” will revolve around a high school senior girl, Marin, a victim of teacher harassment. The teacher will make advances and passes towards Marin in an inappropriate manner.

“The whole teacher student thing is becoming increasingly relevant in the media, so it’s a topic worthy of exploring,” said senior Arthur Natale. “It is something that many people might easily identify with, especially since a majority of college students are women and there are many of male college professors.”

Marin channels “Sex in the City” protagonist Carrie Bradshaw by writing for the school newspaper, creating the column “Rules for Being a Girl.”

“Even if you were not directly affected by sexual violence, being able to read a book and see someone else’s perspective as if they were sexually abused can educate people on what to do and how to deal with someone who was affected negatively from sexual violence,” said Zebitsch.

The novel is set to be published and released in 2020.

Bushnell’s intention is to represent the new generation of girls who are affected by these acts of violence and assault.

“Creating a book about the ‘Me Too Movement’ just adds to the power of the effort, making it more difficult to eventually sweep these issues under the rug and forget about them again,” said Natale. “It will keep the conversation and progress alive. This movement is something with the ability to create real culture change.”

“Queer Eye” Starts its Third Season

BY JOSEPH BRAUN
Staff Reporter

“Queer Eye,” the popular Netflix show, returned for its third season on March 15. The show focuses on the “Fab Five,” made up of Antoni Porowski, Jonathan Van Ness, Tan France, Karamo Brown, and Bobby Berk.

The group announced the return of their show with a release date and trailer video that they shared on Feb. 15 to their nearly 1.3 million Instagram followers.

With each man being an expert in their own craft, they accept the responsibilities for going in and restoring the style, confidence, fashion, interior design, and culture of the average (often) straight man.

Each character of the “Fab Five” has their own unique personality that sets them apart from the others. These personalities blend together to achieve the rescue of someone who is culturally and stylistically lost.

“Van Ness is a true queen. He is very emotional and truly wants all of his clients to feel their best. You can tell he loves what he does and is very passionate about making people fall in love with who they see in the mirror,” said junior Emma Stent.

The gang picks a different location to shoot for during each season. In search of people that are in need of a makeover, for their third season, the “Fab Five” took their talents from Atlanta to Kansas City, Miss.

“Queer Eye” season three episodes are now available for streaming on Netflix.
The women’s golf team held their annual SHU Spring Invite on April 7 and 8. The tournament took place at the Great River Golf course located in Milford, Conn., which is the Pioneers’ home course. The team came off a fourth place finish at the Lady Cat Invitational, which took place from March 7 through 8 in Daytona Beach, Fla. According to Athletic Communications, senior Chelsea Sedlar and freshman Adia Bowman both finished tied for ninth.

We really shined at the Lady Cat Invitational and I think the atmosphere from those good scores will push us through conference," said Sedlar.

After the Lady Cat Invitational, the team had time off to prepare for the final stretch of the season. This allowed for extended time to pracise for the SHU Invite and next week’s North East Conference (NEC) Championships.

"Since we returned from our spring trip we have been focusing on our proximity to the hole and driving accuracy," said head coach Matthew McGreevy. "We are building for the conference championship and we are looking to use our home event as a springboard for a successful conference championship."

Siena College won the first day of the competition by 14 points over Sacred Heart. Sacred Heart had 318 points on the day, while Sacred Heart had 332. Conference and are aiming to win conference championships that will be taking place in Florida from April 12 through 14.

"I think we are all prepared for conference and are aiming to win conference. We used the SHU Invite as a practice tournament to get ready for the mental pressure of conference," said junior Ann Conteras.

On April 13 and 14 the men’s golf team will be hosting their annual SHU Invites before they begin conference play-off well.

Sacred Heart Baseball Begins NEC Play

With the Northeast Conference (NEC) portion of the schedule beginning for the Pioneers baseball team, there is a feeling of a fresh start to their season, which began with 24 of their first 26 games on the road, including the first 23 games of the year.

“There’s a reason the non-conference schedule was so tough,” said sophomore infielder Jake Frasca.

“The better competition you play, the more you raise to those standards. We rise to that level. It puts us in a great spot in NEC play.”

The team began the non-conference portion of their schedule 5-15, and thanks to series wins over LIU Brooklyn and Fairleigh Dickinson, the Pioneers are off to a 4-2 start in NEC play.

“It goes to our preparation in practices and meetings,” said head coach Nick Restaino.

“The message is to play the game one pitch at a time, do something new to help us later. If you do your job, you can win a game and a series.”

While the schedules for each season are planned a year in advance, there is the hope by playing against tough opponents, they will respond. Restaino said that while it is risky, the goal is to challenge the team and hope they answer well as they prepare for conference play.

The team has not focused on what they have already done this season.

“We can’t get complacent and content. We have to keep our foot on the gas pedal,” said sophomore pitcher Ryan LaMay. “We can’t get complacent and content. We have to keep our foot on the gas pedal,” said sophomore pitcher Ryan LaMay. “We wish we were 6-0. If you get complacent, it can lead to mediocrity.”

With the weather warming up in the northeast, the team is finally beginning to have the opportunity to play baseball on their home field, something they haven’t done before.

“The first couple weeks of the season are always challenging,” said LaMay. “We spend our early practices indoors while southern teams are outside. We come into these games as prepared as you can get with indoor facilities.”

LaMay also said that the teams who had the ability to practice outside all winter were slightly better at executing the little things, which ultimately gave them the slight advantage.

According to Athletic Communications, LaMay leads the Pioneers in innings pitched and Frasca leads the team in hits. Their jobs range to more than just the baseball field. For a team that has just six seniors, it is their job to guide the freshmen, who have already made strides in their young college careers.

“We have a lot of impactful freshmen. Our centerfielder, Justin Jordan, has been extremely helpful. We have a couple other guys who are throwing the ball well,” said Frasca. “It’s important for them to see what our conference is like and that we are a top-tier team. We spent all this time practicing and they finally get to see the result on the field.”

With the season not even as its midpoint yet, the goal is to continue to improve every day.

“If you worry about one thing that happens, it affects the whole series,” said Restaino. “Our message is to play the game one pitch at a time. If we do our job, the pressure will go to be in our favor.”
The Sacred Heart Winter Guard competed this past week in Dayton, Ohio, at the Winter Guard International World Championships.

The guard program is split between fall and winter seasons. The fall Color Guard performs at halftime at football games and does exhibitions for local high school competitions. The Winter Guard also competes in the local circuit, Musical Arts Conference (MAC), and the international circuit, Winter Guard International (WGI).

"Winter Guard is guard is a competitive indoor sport known as the sport of the arts," said junior guard captain Amber Luis, a three-year veteran of the team. "It incorporates dance, visual and general effects, and excellence with spinning choreography of flags, sabres, and rifles."

The 22-member team practices three days a week, totaling over 14 hours of preparation. The group has come together during those practice hours and focuses on various aspects of the sport. Since 2003, they have been competing all across the country, showcasing their skills. Junior Emma Schwartz has been a part of eight competitions this season.

"To prepare for worlds, I practice my show a lot of times in my head. Winter Guard is a very mental activity, so I like to remind myself that I am capable of doing well," said Schwartz.

It is because the university offers the program that some of the members, like Schwartz, considered Sacred Heart as an option for college in the first place.

"I had heard about Winter Guard before joining. It's one of the reasons I chose Sacred Heart University. I joined Winter Guard because my high school didn't have Winter Guard; we just had Color Guard. I always wanted to be in a Winter Guard that competes and goes to Dayton," said Schwartz.

While championships bring out a competitive attitude, it is also fun for the club to get involved and compete like they did in 2018.

"Worlds last year was a lot of fun. It was our first time in a new division, which was hard, competitively - but still a great time," said Schwartz.

Winter Guard requires little experience to join, as it is a transition from the marching band in the fall semester, where you begin to learn the skills. The club is welcoming to all and it is open to any questions that pertain to joining and what it is like to be a member of the team.

"Being a member means to be a part of a very close team and friendship. We've fully bonded over this activity that is very unique to any other sport. The activity itself takes a great amount of individual practice to be proficient, and in essence to be a member you need a high awareness of time management," said Luis.
