New communication major starting

Special to the Spectrum

During advising week in April, Sacred Heart University students will be able to choose a new major in Communication and Technology Studies for the 2001-2002 academic year.

The Communication and Technology Studies Program (or CTS) will be offered by the College of Arts and Sciences through the Department of Languages/Literature/Media Studies and the Department of Computer Science/Information Technology, and supported by courses offered through Computer Science, Media Studies, English, Art, Sociology, Psychology, and Philosophy.

"The CTS major is directed at students who wish to become leaders in creating the communication environment of the future," said Frances Grodzinsky, professor of Computer Science and Information Technology, who co-designed the major with Judy Miller and Louise Spence of the Department of Languages, Literature and Media Studies. "At the heart of the major will be the study of the social, ethical and historical implications of new technologies and computer communication, including the Internet and the Web.

"Approaching the subject from the sociological, psychological, and philosophical perspectives will prepare students for leadership in a variety of professions and careers," said Claire Paulini, Dean of the

WHRT on top of their game with new equipment and more coming soon

By Lori Singer
Staff Writer

For the first time since Christmas Break, WHRT is back on the air. Beginning this week, Sacred Heart University students all around campus will be able to tune into 91.5 or channel 6 to hear the new and improved sound of WHRT.

After about 20 years, with money from their budget, the radio station was finally able to install a year 2000 soundboard. They also purchased a new computer. This computer now has radio editing software in it thanks to the Station Manager, Justin Lear and the "technology equipment guy from WSHU," Abe Litilieere.

Another feature added was the "computer automated program," said Lear. This allows the "DJ to load up to 100 songs, for up to 24 hours," he said. The main advantage of this set up is that it can be "used over night or when someone is not going to be there," he added. Other items bought to bring the radio station up to date include a new micro­phone and CD changer.

Lear has been a DJ for WHRT, since his freshmen year when he teamed up with Dave Bertoli because he "thought it would be cool to have a radio show."

As a junior he became more involved in the music aspect of the station; he became the Music Director until his senior year, when he became the Station Manager.

"Currently, Lear has an internship with Virgin Records in New York City. After four years of being a Media Studies major, Justin plans to pursue a career in the music industry."

Next on agenda for the radio station and its 30 members will be to "start up Internet broadcasting and get a larger studio," said Lear.

Most people watch TV to be entertained. But to Media Studies Professor James Castonguay, TV not only entertains us, it shapes who we are.

Castonguay has committed himself to helping students become more aware of the affect the media has on our society. For example, a popular television show like "Friends" has a direct impact on viewers. They view the behavior, trendy clothing and hairstyles of the actresses and actors and consider these characteristics to be acceptable.

Many people model the lifestyles depicted on these shows. According to Castonguay, the show tells us that "friends are important, while also teaching us that people from different racial groups don't hang out with each other."

"Because of his insight and experience in the field of media studies and his ability to inspire his students, Castonguay represents the best of SHU," said Michele Shawah, Staff Writer.

By Melissa Greenhaigh
Staff Writer

Who let the dogs out? "SHU let the Dogs Out" is this year's theme for the Eighth Annual Sibling's Weekend. Last year's theme was "Siblings Weekend: Out of This World," in which aliens and space ships decorated the entire campus.

Now with the popular song "Who Let the Dogs Out" and the new movie 102 Dalmatians, SET decided on a dog oriented theme for this year. Each sibling will receive a Dalmatian stuffed animal dressed in an aviator outfit when they arrive and sign in at the Hawley Lounge.

The new freshman class helps to host this event each year. The freshmen volunteer their time to run each event, so the siblings feel welcome all weekend long. There are a number of interactive activities set up, so that at the end of the weekend, everyone has something to conclude the weekend with.

Castonguay: Looking at media differently

sents the Media Studies Department as SHU's next unsung hero. He received his Ph.D. and master's from the University of Wisconsin, and earned his bachelor's from Clark University.

Castonguay came to SHU two years ago after previous teaching experience at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

At the University of Michigan he taught studies in communications, film and video. Castonguay regularly taught classes of 350 students. He admits that he chose to come to SHU because "with the small class sizes you get to know the students and faculty members better, the department faculty is excellent and its proximity to New York is great."

At SHU, Castonguay teaches classes such as Introduction to Media Studies, History of Broadcasting and History of Journalism. In his classes, Castonguay "blends experimental and traditional teaching methods." He wants to "empower students to become critical thinkers." Castonguay admits that he likes the students to participate and engage in discussions. He finds that through discussion he often learns as much from his students as they learn from him.

Castonguay expects that his students will "understand ethical implications that the media has on society." By looking at this medium through critical discussion of TV, newspaper, radio and film, students will be able to understand the media's influences on society's choices.

The projects his students worked on included comparing present day news with news from the 1890's, discussing the role of women in television and discussing the prevalence of Napster and MP3s.

Students have also produced their own videos on important events at SHU, such as Hurricane Carter's lecture. His students have also taken internships for major media networks such as HBO, ABC, FOX, NBC, MTV, and CNN.

From years of teaching experience, Castonguay has developed his ideas on the media industry. According to Castonguay, "Television is a commercial medium that depicts certain lifestyles, clothes, behaviors and shows us what is acceptable."

Because of the age group appropriate shows, television also "segregates people and limits and defines who we can be as humans." Every group of people that view television has their own channel: Lifetime for women, the Black Entertainment Channel, the Spanish Channel, and MTV, to name a few. This diverse network of channels was purposely created to form an "advertising monoply in which specific commercials are shown during certain shows to target specific audiences of various ages and backgrounds."

One can defeat the system when he/she watches a show that is not considered popular for his/her age group. For example, a young child will not view toy commercials during an episode of "NYPD Blue" or "ER" nor will an adult view a medicine commercial on MTV.

Outside of the classroom, Castonguay has worked on many projects in the field of Media Studies. He also teaches a media studies course on line. Through this method of distance learning, Castonguay feels he can reach "adult learners, full-time workers and can give back to the community." He also developed a summer camp program called Media Knowledge Inc, which allows students in grades 6-8 to think more critically about the affect of the media and give them the opportunity to create their own video projects.

In the future, Castonguay hopes that there will be a continued movement toward media literacy and business opportunities in the field.

CTS: New major at SHU

College of Arts and Sciences

In response to the need for leadership in technology, CTS will focus on social and ethical issues of communication, such as policy making, data information privacy, intellectual property, moral agency, and the issues of globalization and community.

According to Communication and Technology Studies Coordinator James Castonguay, "In both their professional and their personal lives, people will increasingly encounter two constants: communication and technology. Much of what they experience will be electronically mediated, and computer technology and digital communication will be a primary method of interaction."

"A new interdisciplinary major was needed to respond to these new realities and to prepare our students to be leaders in the new information age," added Castonguay.

weekend each child goes home feeling that they are a part of the campus community. Some events include "Blues Clues" Scavenger Hunt, "102 Dalmatians" Movie, and "Rockin the Pound" Carnival.

"Last year's carnival did not have a lot of interactive activities for the kids, so we added a few more fun ideas for them to enjoy," stated Brandi Blevins, President of SET.

"Also some of the clubs and organizations, including the frats, will run booths to help make the kids feel more involved," Blevins said.

This year the Carnival will include Fousse Ball, Sumo Wrestling, in which kids are suited up in a large sumo outfit, and "Dinosaur Obstacle Course. The booths will include sand art and hand casts, which will make a lasting impression on those that attended this year's event. March 23 kicks off Siblings Weekend with a "Welcome to the Pound" registration followed by a welcome feast, movie, scavenger hunt, and magic show. "Dog's Day" starts off Saturday and hosts Carnival as the main event. Finally the weekend comes "Rolling to an End" on Sunday with a "Barking Brunch" and movie.

SHU looks forward to seeing new and smiling faces; so invite your sibling so they can experience what campus life is all about.

All are welcome to attend so if you don't have a brother or sister invite someone to share the fun and excitement that Siblings Weekend brings each year.

Installation a success, for the most part

To the surprise of many, we’re sure, SHU pulled off a great event with the installation of Bishop Edward Lori on Monday. Thousands packed the Pitt Center for the event and it was a sight to see.

Five cardinals, dozens of bishops and archbishops and even almost-vice president Joseph Lieberman and representative Christopher Shays were there. For all the concerns over parking and crowding on campus, it wasn’t as bad as many had envisioned (although it was still a pain in the butt to drive around on Monday).

We do, however, question why the school decided to cover up all of the bulletin boards on campus during the event. Was it for purely aesthetic reasons or were they concerned about some of the displays that adorned the halls (the one for the Gay-Straight Alliance comes to mind)?

SHU should be proud of all the organizations that put in the hard work to make our university a more well-rounded school and should not feel the need to cover up all of the activity boards that are a regular part of our campus.

We shouldn’t feel the need to hide the things that are a part of our campus from the community if they are an accredited part of our university. That sends a clear message of hypocrisy to the SHU community, one that truly is not part of our mission as a Catholic university.

Water a basic human necessity, even for frrotch

For those who don’t live in South or West Hall, it may come as a surprise to learn that our freshmen have been having problems with water. More specifically, there hasn’t been much to go around lately.

We realize that the freshmen are partly to blame for this, the original incident was the result of underwear being stuck in the toilet, but still, these problems should be fixed in a faster manner then they have been. We pay a great deal of money to live in the residence halls, more than many people play for their own homes. Running water is not something that we should go without, for any reason.

It is a basic right of anyone who pays the astronomical fees that we do for housing and is not asking for any more than they are entitled to. It is only the faster solution that we are looking for. We realize that the freshmen are partly to blame for this and we want them to know that we want a solution.

In general, Americans are more outspoken than international students. A good command of English is not as important as the ability and willingness to speak up.

The ability to speak up is crucial in the classroom. We shouldn’t feel the need to hide the things that we are from a different country. It is a basic right of anyone who pays the astronomical fees that we do for housing and is not asking for any more than they are entitled to.

The Badger Herald, University of Wisconsin

Stop and take a look around. Look at the people who walk past you. Look at the people who sit in the same lecture hall. Look at the people who share that corner booth. Then notice whom they are with.

Whether we are American, Asian or African, we have a tendency to interact with people who come from the same background. There are exceptions but they seem few and far between. As a result, all across campus, we have small homogenous groups.

But I wonder whether this is the way things should be. The university actively promotes diversity by attracting non-white Americans and international students. For the most part, this has worked well — numerically. Socially, much needs to be done to integrate the different groups.

One reason I came to the United States was to interact with Americans. I tell my friends repeatedly, "I didn't travel halfway across the world just to mix with other Singaporeans." Unfortunately, I find myself doing that too often. After all, we speak the same 'brand' of English, behave in the same manner and share the same tastes.

This helps me feel more comfortable in a strange land, but at the same time, I want to integrate the different groups. To my house—cuz that 'seems' to be the place to be.

I can't speak for all foreign students, but as an Asian, I don't have a glib tongue. Asians are generally conservative, so it takes a greater effort to speak up, especially if our English sounds unclear and we're afraid of sounding silly.

It also doesn't help that we are from a different country. Nothing is more difficult to penetrate than a common background, the 'hometown mentality'. This is true for both Americans and international students. You are more likely to want to be with someone from your hometown because of the comfort of familiarity. This struck home at class one day. I was talking to an American when she suddenly started talking to another American after realizing that they were from the same town. I was further alienated when they started talking about the people who lived there.

It is rather daunting coming from a town with the same population as the UW campus. But there are 6 billion people in the world, or about 150,000 times the UW enrollment!

When we consider that a fraction of these people study at the same university, let alone the same class, then we have a wonderful opportunity to learn about and appreciate another culture. This, I believe, is the ultimate goal of diversity.

Dear Editor,

In the movie * Patton*, George C. Scott, playing our hero, boasts that he has been greatly successful at welcoming German and Italians to the "infernal regions" and hopes that the European war will soon be over, so that he "will get a chance to go to the Pacific and kill Japanese."

Earlier in the film, he had described his training techniques: "In about fifteen minutes we're going to start turning these boys into fanatics, razors!"

Over the top? Oh, to be sure. After all, it's Hollywood. But to me it's also art imitating life.

When I was in the army, some 25 years after Patton's death, we were taught to chant this mantra: "What's the spirit of a bayonet fighter? Kill! Kill! Kill!"

And since we were being trained to kill, we had to be trained to hate as well. Then hated other was not the Germans or Japanese, but "gooks," in the parlance of the olive drab patriots teaching us. Nothing much had changed; nothing much, I suspect, has changed since.

And so when I hear that the ROTC -- a seedbed for these activities -- is returning to our campus, I'm appalled.

And I ask myself a few questions: Why would a university that trumpets Catholic ideals embrace an organization that glorifies war? Why would it want its students influenced to write their own page in the long, melancholy volume of human slaughter? And why would a university -- even a Catholic university -- welcome in its midst an organization whose highest intellectual ideal is an uncritical, unquestioning obedience to authority?

Dear Editor,

Well, Class of 2001, the end is approaching. It is hard to believe, but on May 20, the faces that you have come to know over the past four years will no longer in the room next door, or in the Dining Hall for a daily get together.

Have I depressed you enough yet? If so, I apologize, but I do have something that will make you happy. Graduation is approaching...that is true, but more importantly, Senior Week is coming.

The packets have been sent out and the theme has been announced. It is now your turn to join the process. If you have any questions regarding any of the mailings or Senior Week in general, the class officers will be around on March 25 at 8 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge, and on March 28 at 10 p.m. in the Outpost directly before Pub Night.

If you cannot make any of these meetings, please do not hesitate to contact Tom Wuestkamp either by email (wuestkat@sacredheart.edu) or in the Student Government Office, extension 7954. I would be more than happy to help you in any way possible.

Also, mark your calendars, Mr. SHU is coming. It is April 4 at 10 p.m. in the Theatre

We're getting more letters, but we still are looking for more. Send one in today!!
Jennifer Mattei has used a cell phone for seven years and agrees with Giannella that the amount of usage may have an influence.

"I believe that the findings are inconclusive," said Mattei. "There are many factors that may cause or contribute to the development of a tumor. For example, genetic dispositions may cause one to be affected or unaffected by the radiation."

According to an article on Radiationbuster.com, cell phone radiation is "produced within the body of the phone and at the antenna. Much of the radiation produced in the body of the phone comes out through the ear piece. Since the ear piece of the phone is normally held to the ear, the radiation passes through the ear and to the brain. Radiation from the antenna passes through the bone of the skull and then also to the brain."

The radiation from cellular phones is Electro-Magnetic Field radiation and is "the same range used by microwave ovens, though at a much lower intensity" says Radiationbuster.com.

One study by WaveBuster concluded that cell phone use increases the temperature of the user's head. There have been numerous studies conducted to measure the correlation between cell phone usage and brain cancer. Most studies have produced data that support and negate the claim that cell phones may cause brain tumors.

In 1993, Dr. George Carlo was contracted to head the Wireless Technology Research Group. Carlo said, "the goal of the WTR has always been to identify and solve any problems concerning consumer's health that could arise from the use of these phones."

In a letter to Armstrong in October 1999, Carlo recapped five points the study concluded.

The rate of death from brain cancer among handheld phone users was higher than the rate of brain cancer death among those who used non-handheld phones that were away from their head.

The risk of acoustic neuroma, a benign of the auditory nerve that is well in range of the radiation coming from a phone's antenna, was fifty percent higher in people who reported using cell phones for six years or more, moreover, that relationship between the amount of cell phone use and this tumor appeared to follow a dose-response curve.

The risk of rare neuro epithelial tumors on the outside of the brain was more than doubled, a statistically significant increase, in cell phone users as compared to people who did not use cell phones.

There appeared to be some correlation between brain tumors occurring on the right side of the head and the use of the phone on the right side of the head.

Laboratory studies looking at the ability of radiation from a phone's antenna to cause functional genetic damage were definitely positive, and were following a dose-response relationship.

Carlo did acknowledge that while "none of these findings alone were evidence of a definitive health hazard from wireless phones, the pattern of potential health effects evidenced by different types of studies...raised serious questions."

However, since brain tumors can take 7-10 years to develop, a four year study of cell phone users may provide data that is inconclusive.

The only factor that may truly demonstrate whether present day cell phone users will be suffering in hospitals across the country in 2010, is time.

So, in the meantime, are SHU students concerned about the health implications of cell phone use?

Senior Marie Cetti said, "Having a cell phone is definitely a way of life. I use my phone all the time. I will worry about the health effects when there is actual evidence."

"Most people don't use the cell phone enough to make a difference," said Mattei. "People who have the phone in their car all day may be in more danger."

Mattei recounts that "you are more likely to die from using a cell phone while driving than getting cancer."

In Westchester County, NY, drivers can be fined if found driving while using a cell phone.

In response to the concerns for driving and radiation safety, there have been various accessories created for the cell phone, including hands-free accessories and radiation shields that deflect radiation away from the head of the user.

However, the hands-free phone accessory can possibly cause more harm than good. RFSafe.com details the risks of using the popular hands-free phone accessories. The ear pieces actually channel radiation directly into the brain.

An article on the site states that "hands free kits are a bad idea...the Radiation travels through the wire connecting the phone and earpiece and penetrates the head directly through the ear canal (No protection from skull)."

According to the article, thick bone masses or tissue makes it more difficult for radiation frequencies to penetrate directly into the brain.

Poll: Do you have a cell phone?

Total: 100 students

Yes, I do own a cell phone. Yes, I don't own a cell phone.

On-screen chemistry between lead actors in a film is very important in the anticipated success of the film; especially an action packed detective film.}

On-screen chemistry between lead actors in a film is very important in the anticipated success of the film; especially an action packed detective film. Just look at Will Smith and Martin Lawrence in Bad boys and Chris Tucker and Jackie Chan in Rush Hour. But some films were very successful due to the on-screen chemistry between the two lead actors. Consequently, both are set for sequels in the near future.

15 Minutes is the latest film from writer/director John Herzfeld, also known for Providence. Of course, Herzfeld needs no introduction, plays Eddie Fleming, a big time New York homicide detective who is immensely popular with the media and people of New York City.

Burns plays Jordy Warsaw, a young and unknown New York City fire marshal that uses his wit to take down the dangerous duo out to gain 15 minutes of fame by killing someone famous and filming the act for the world to see.

Melin A Kanakaredes (Providence) plays Nicolette, a WB News reporter that also happens to be the girlfriend of DeNiro in 15 Minutes.

Dear SHU,

Weeks after I entered my first foreign country, I found myself anxious to see others. Mona Lisa's eyes follow me all over like a character in a movie. The Cathedral de Notre Dame effortlessly fills my eyes with tears. The Eiffel Tower shines at night. The incinerator in Trier takes my breath away; passing into the city under such an enormous structure gave me goosebumps.

I never expected Germany to make my head turn. I stood on the fields where US troops fought the last battle of WWII in Belgium and in Luxembourg, or how chestnuts distinctly change the smell of Paris.

I wish I could explain how ten kids from SHU who barely knew each other, became a part of my family.

Each day here, I learn a bit more about myself, and about the differences around me. I know exactly what I'm doing now—I'm earning my education.

Dear SHU,

I cried when I stepped off the plane.

Exhausted and un-showered, I made my way to the front of the Luxembourg airport to meet my host mom. She took no time spotting me; she need only toss aside self-consciousness and I spoke French with her like a native.

"Holy shit," I thought, "what the hell am I doing?"

I barely knew where to begin. I knew I needed a nap, a call home, and not much more. Sonia (my host mom) denied me the nap; she said I needed only further the effects of jetlag, but she encouraged the call home.

After answering machine picked up and I attempted to fake assurance; saying every­thing would be ok, while my voice cracked with tears. I hung up and suddenly became aware of the vast size of the Atlantic. No trips home for the weekend.

Three days after the horrifying walk off the plane, I totally forget about the Atlantic. I walked around this foreign city, in this foreign country, on this foreign continent, like knew what I was doing. Somehow, I conjured enough gumption to try to soaked aside self-conscious­ness and I spoke French with people from France. I debated politics (and life in general) with Germans, Portuguese, Italians, French, Luxembourgers, and Belgians.

Kristpohe, a brilliant young man from Poland barely speaks English, and I can't even properly say "hello" in Polish, but we make each other laugh.

Herve and Gismon two aspiring French law students educate me on the hardships of the degree pursuits, while I try to explain my purpose at Sacred Heart. Of course, Daichia shares her peppermint tea with honey, the cure-all for any problem.

Along with my fellow SHU­

Up close and personal with 3 Doors Down

By Kerry Frel
Staff Writer

Interview

Sex, Drugs and Rock-n-Roll, that’s what the music industry is all about right? This slogan depends on your perspective. As a headlining band along with a platinum album, life is good. But sometimes the opening act is not always as lucky. Aroma candles scent the room and produce a dim setting. Todd Harrell, 39, of Doors Down sits on a couch strumming a guitar, recording new music even as he is about to perform in just a few short hours. It was truly amazing to witness his commitment to music.

How was being stranded in a comfy couch surrounded by jumbo-sized bags of Doritos and Tostitos as Fuel’s soundcheck went on, the questions began. Yes, they had a "condemned building" near where the 3 Doors Down band members live. There was a broken sign on it that just read "Doors Down" and at the time when the band saw it; there were only three of them in the group. So they decided on the name 3 Doors Down.

The band is tightly knit, as they have known each other for a long time. Most of the members have been friends for over 15 years.

Todd Harrell, with his superman 3 tattoo, blonde hair, and eyebrow ring, answered some questions before the performance on Saturday.

When asked, "How old were you when you decided you wanted to be a musician as a career?" Harrell responded, "It’s always been a part of my life. Everything I see and hear inspires me. Growing up I was into rock music. I listened to bands like Van Halen, AC/DC, and Lynard Skynard."

During the interview, two men came in and explained that they were the ones who set up the guitars and such for the band. Todd said that the man with the longer hair used to do sound check with one of his favorite bands, Lynard Skynard.

"We all write the songs." Harrell explained. "Brad does the lyrics and we all write the music together as a group effort. Brad is amazing. He writes all the time and is constantly thinking of new ideas and he’s only around 22. I love about one of our friends that got on cocaine. That’s life. Bad stuff happens. But we’re not a dark group. There is just a darkness to life and the lyrics reflect that at times."

They picked out the CD cover from negatives of pictures taken along the way.

When asked, "What are your feelings on the radio playing out your songs? Does it anger you?" Harrell answered, "The radio can wear your songs out, but they can be your best friend. We owe a lot to the radio, that’s how we got our record deal!"

How does a band deal with food on the road? Contrary to people’s beliefs, most bands do not have a hired chef on their tour bus.

"Chef? No, we don’t have a chef. We mostly fast food it when we’re out on the road. Sometimes we go out to eat and it’s really good food.

How does a person do laundry while touring? "We have a production assistant for that kind of stuff."

3 Doors Down toured in over 11 countries last year including Germany, Fratisek, Holland, and Denmark. The band is planning to tour in Australia this summer.

So with all this touring does the band get attached to the bus? Todd does.

"I love the bus. It’s weird going home and sleeping in a bed. For the time we’re touring, the bus is home. Life slows down at home, but it’s wonderful to really go home. The last time we went home for a break, I really did nothing. It was great."

Do bands sing in other languages when they tour in other countries? "I speak English. But it’s cool because the people can’t speak to you, but they’ll sing your songs to you.

There have never been any girls in 3 DD right? "No, no girls were ever in the band," Harrell explained.

"Could there ever be a girl in the group, if she was extremely talented and offered something important to the group? "If she could jam, it would be cool with me," Harrell said.

Relationships are hard any time. But being on the road doesn’t make life at home, or with a girl, any easier.

"It really depends on the people involved. Our lead guitar, Todd, was planning to get married in May. For most of us, if it works, it works, if it doesn’t, it doesn’t. It’s tough. Some of us just don’t want to float around between people," Harrell said."

Back stage staff writer Kerry Frel gets up close with some of the members of Oleander.

"You see your family when you can. Everyone is really supportive and we usually have a big party."

What does Todd Harrell think of Napster? "It’s a good and a bad thing. It’s good for up and coming bands so they can get their name out. Maybe it would be better if you could just get a sample of a song instead of the whole thing."

One of the most interesting responses arrived when Harrell asked to read the questions and came upon one not yet asked.

"How do you deal with the technology? "That’s a good question. I’d be dead already! We have these inner ear monitors. They mold to your ear far inside. They squint this stuff in your ear and it just melds to fit perfectly. You can’t see it, and it saves your hearing."

With his money he has made a few fun purchases, Harrell got a Prowler, a "bad" two-seat car. He also bought a really nice house. All the band members live fairly near each other.

Harrell’s advice for everyday life, "Be happy in everything. Money isn’t everything."

Oleander members Thomas Flowers and Ric Ivanisevich have been on tour with really big bands. But they don’t have millions to spend on luxuries.

They are just trying to enjoy their time on tour and trying to make their album a big success. UNWIND is their second album. With it’s powerful chords and down-to-earth lyrics it inspires the listener to experience never before felt emotions.

"The boat ride only lasts so long. It’s whether you are going to be in the canoe or the Titanic when it sinks," explains lead singer, 33, Thomas Flowers.

Flowers has also dappled in artwork, the "splatter paint" technique, and wants to write poetry in the form of stream of consciousness.

Oleander’s Flowers and Ric, "No ", Ivanisevich, 32, like to go home from touring. Ivanisevich gets a little stir-crazy at times, but he said, "When we go home, there’s that much more love to enjoy."

The band was very friendly.

Dave Matthews goes pop; album review

By Brian McGrath

Music Review

Dave Matthews Band fans might be in for a shock when they listen to the new CD Everyday. The first riff heard on the album is an electric guitar. Stop checking out the cover, you might be in for a shock when you see the music even as he is about to perform in just a few short hours. It was truly amazing to witness his commitment to music.

The new DMB album does retain one essential ingredient that transcends Everyday’s calculated pop; Dave Matthews. Dave’s unique vocals push forth dynamic nature. Dave Matthews claims that he was under a great deal of depression when he wrote the songs and didn’t want the album to contain. However, when the songs were recorded by long time DMB producer Steve Lillywhite, were cut from the play list due to their slow, dreary nature. The new DMB album does retain one essential ingredient that transcends Everyday’s calculated pop; Dave Matthews. Dave’s unique vocals push forth passion, anger, and lust over a background of violentist Boyd Tinsley and Saxon Leroi that vocalize. However, when the album took was that was needed both by the bands and fans. Everyday is a long way from the bands criticized improvisational “dead-head” antics. DMB’s “hippies like” message still rings clear through in the first track “I Did It”; “I’m mixing up a bunch of magic stuff! Make a bomb of love and blow it up.” Other songs like “The Space Between” and “When the World Ends,” release a groovy sensual feel and non-fans a like can enjoy.

The songs on Everyday are totally unexpected from the Dave Matthews Band that proves this 10-year old group still has some tricks up their sleeves. The long saxophone and violin intros have been traded in for a more edgy, punchy feel.
SHU Players find a place to call their own

Commentary

The time has finally come. The Sacred Heart University Student Theater now has a black box performance space that they can call their own. A new theater season has begun featuring the SHU Players. The University Theater is scheduled to undergo renovation, so this space is a real-life-saver. The SHU Players are now producing in the Community Room in Curtis Hall. With a little magic, blood, sweat, and tears on the part of the SHU Players, CA275 and Rick McKinnon, the Community Room has now become "The University Theater." This is a very exciting time for the Players. For the first time in our history, most of the shows are being completely student run.

This includes every aspect of the theater process from start to finish. The use of the new space will allow for more productions then ever possible before.

The first two shows of the season are "Love, Lust and Room Service" and "Race" were a success. "Love, Lust and Room Service" was a collection of five one-act plays written on the topics of love, life, and relationships. It was a comedic look at their coming of age, most people know all to well.

"Race" was a collection of monologues and short dialogues written on life in contemporary society.

It illustrates the struggles of daily life from the viewpoint of four people: one White female, one White male, one African-American female and one African-American male.

This play dealt with issues such as racial profiling and race relations in a domestic setting.

It was a creative look at the society in the United States today. After speaking with several cast members of both shows, and asking them for their opinions on the new space, the general consensus was that, aside from a few bugs, all are optimistic about working in the new performance space.

All in all, the Players are pleased with their success thus far. "Twelve Angry Jurors," under the direction of Peter Harrell, is currently in production. I spoke to Peter last Sunday and asked him his feelings on directing the first major production in the Bowley-Newman Theater.

He told me that he was very excited about doing this production. "Twelve Angry Men" is a well known piece, which Peter has adjusted to modern times by casting males and females in the formerly all male cast. He then changed the title to "Twelve Angry Jurors."

The most interesting part of changing such a famous play, according to Peter, is that by casting both sexes, you alter the dynamics of the play.

In addition to "Twelve Angry Jurors," "Everybody Needs Something," which was written and is being directed by Jeremy Gordon, is currently in rehearsal. One can only anticipate yet another set of great performances by the SHU Players.

and joked about their lack of million-dollar wardrobe. Like when asked if they had chefs, Flowers and Ivanisevich answered, "If you wait long enough, they will feed you. We like going to venues to wait long enough before they will feed us. We like going to venues to get free food."

Flowers and Ivanisevich would like to collaborate with many bands in the future. Both bands have signed with a record label, and included a band formerly known as Virgos Merlot, now just Virgos, the two bands they are on tour with, 3 Doors Down and Fuel, and also Creed, Candlebox, and Collective Soul.

Unlike Harrell who liked to listen to "loud and crazy music" and nothing matters anymore. Since he can't get his wife out of his mind, he ends up finding that his wife is no longer in France modeling, but in New York City. He trades a deal with Tad. Jamie will take Tad's costume. Vicky, for tickets Tad can get for Amanda's modeling exhibit.

The date with Vicky is a more positive aspect in Jamie's deadly life, and he gets along very well with her. He does not even use drugs that night in the restroom. He wants to have a pleasant evening with Vicky.

The modeling exhibition does not go well at all. Jamie sees Amanda on stage, and shouts out loud, "Amanda. I want an explanation." Jamie gets thrown and dragged out of the exhibition by a bodyguard. Two minutes later, Jamie sees his brother Michael, and he runs away. Jamie goes on the subway to get away from him. His brother sees him, though.

On the subway, Jamie sees a New York Post paper. It says "Coma Baby Still Lives". That is really referring to Jamie. He is still alive, yet he is in a coma. He is not himself. Aggravation and chemicals have taken over his life. He does not even want to see his own brother. He does not have a job, or anyone. He has himself, and but what is not really him to begin with.

The final party sequence is a powerful scene, and Jamie himself knows he is in trouble. I will not give it away. It is the most disturbing but sad, but the most important scene in the film.

Unlike many young adult movies in the 1980's, such as John Hughes films like The Breakfast Club, drugs is not taken seriously at all. The scene in the library of them getting high on pot is supposed to be funny.

In "Bright Light, Big City", even though we are not dealing with teenagers, but young adults in their twenties, is serious about drugs. The film shows us drugs can put you in your own world, which 'makes you a coma baby." It's not a joke at all, and that is why this film deserves that credit, compared to other 80's films. The script of Jay McInerney works well, and show does the direction from James Bridges.

The Pioneers also used the three goals tallied by sophomore Steven Grabow (Commack, N.Y.) and TJ Hutchnacher (Pearl River, N.Y.) to ensure the win.

The defensive team, consisting of Dom Villani, Mike Levtchenko, Paul Lyons, Jason Walsh and Shawn Donnelly held strong to prevent the opposition time or space around the goal.

The Pioneers jumped out to a 4-2 lead after the first quarter. The Hawks cut the Pioneers lead early in the second quarter. The Pioneers were able to pull away scoring three unanswered goals to make it 8-4 at the break.

The Pioneers went back to work in the second half, tallying three more goals to make it 11-4.

Freshman Brian Campo (Elmhurst, N.Y.) stopped three shots and junior Scott Urbanati (Coral, N.Y.) had one save for the Pioneers.

“All three goalies did a great job and contributed greatly to the win,” said junior defenseman Dom Villani.

“We controlled the tempo of the game. As a defensive unit we held together and created a solid wall in front of our goalies,” said junior defenseman Mike Levtchenko.

“We played a complete game with minimal mistakes. Every person did their task and the outcome was successful,” said Villani.

Sacred Heart is next in action on Saturday at Mount Saint Mary at 1 p.m.

The win over St. Joseph improves the Pioneers to a 2-2 overall record and a 2-2 in the MAAC.
